
Would you pick up this book?

Posted by Sydney, 13 - 2009/02/09 15:16

Hello and thank you so much for opening this.:)

My name is Sydney and I am a juvenile novelist of 13 years, and strongly wanting opinions.

I am writing a book and have emitted this short paragraph for the back cover of the book, and I would like to know if you personally would want to read this book, here we go:

It was February 14 today, and everyone I knew was seeing pink and red. They were giving and receiving valentines, kissing and hugging and loving. Everything I wanted and needed right now. Not saying I would get anything if I was happily at school today. But I'm not there. I'm here, in this, this machine. I was staring at the white walls, trying to survive without any claustrophobia kicking in. They were checking for tumors. All of my happiness was not some tumor, Jacob was not a tumor.

Also, does anyone have any tips on how to name a book? I need something attention grabbing. Please post

(1) If you think this back cover sounds interesting and

(2) Why or why not and

(3) How you would or did create a title.

:) Thank you times infinity.

I would think about reading this book, I liked the back cover. It sounds interesting and hooks you on the story. As for a title, try underlining significant phrases or think about naming the book after your main character. Sometimes I get an idea for a story before I start thinking about the title, sometimes I get an idea for a title before I start thinking about the story. Whatever order your ideas come in, whenever you do choose the title... Well, the title's not particularly important, just the story.

Re:Would you pick up this book?

Posted by Gitta - 2009/03/24 04:42

About the text:

It sounds very interesting and very mysterious. But, in my opinion (do with it whatever you like), it's a bit too mysterious. The back cover does need to inform the audience what the book is about. This piece would be the perfect beginning of a book, because it instantly hooks you and grabbes your attention. But for the back cover it's just too vague. Tell a bit more about what is going to happen without giving away the ending.

About the title:

I always experiment with the title. I always make a first page in Word and put the title there. Then, as soon as I open the file, I see the title and if I'm not happy with it, I change it. Until I've found the perfect title.

Good luck and hopefully you'll find this useful.

Provide more information for the blurb and it'll be fine. A title is best to make after or during the process of writing as creating a title first is only a vague. When writing, you'll get more depth to help you decide. Does this story have a meaning or moral? You can make that a title, but that'll only work if the story is profound enough. Find the point in the story and one or two words for it-a title too long makes it seem melodramatic when it's supposed to be compelling.:)
